

Steel-Line adds final touch to charity home

Most people will pay a small fortune for a state-of-art home with everything that opens and shuts – and both The George Gregan Foundation and Project 88 hope this is the case when one of Australia's most technologically advanced homes goes under the hammer on 16 December 2007.

Project 88 at Sanctuary Cove is a spectacular contemporary four bedroom house complete with lap pool, outdoor entertainment pavilion and the latest in surround and audio technology situated on a 1002m<sup>2</sup> block of land.

The primary purpose of the project is to raise charity funds for George Gregan's Playground initiative; building playgrounds at hospitals around Australia. A proportion of proceeds from the project will also be directed to the Adam Scott Foundation which is also committed to building facilities for young people who desperately need the support.

Some of Australia's leading building and construction companies have donated goods and services to the project; making the home a showcase of the latest design and technology.

One such philanthropic organisation is Steel-Line Garage Doors, who have donated a Sectional Overhead, Slimline Bushland along with a motor and remote control door operator

Steel-Line Garage Doors Managing Director Geoff Marsdon said the company was approached by ByDesign Homes in October 2007 and jumped at the chance to be involved with the project.

"The humble garage door is the last addition to any home but usually takes up the most frontage of any modern home, and when you think about the functionality and aesthetic it adds to the home, it's a pretty important design element.

"We have chosen this particular door to suit the architectural design of the project, and the door also incorporates curved finger proof joints to safeguard against injury.

"Project 88 is a testament to both the generosity of the building industry and the advancements being made in building design and technology.

"Steel-Line is so pleased that we were able to help and look forward to seeing the finished product and the auction result," Mr Marsdon said.

The home will be auctioned as part of one of Australia's leading corporate hospitality events, Sanctuary Cove's Classic Week, held at Hyatt Regency Sanctuary Cove from December 15-18, 2006.

The final package will also include a Mustang 2800 Sports Cruiser, Golf Buggy, Sanctuary Cove Country Membership and a unique furniture package.
