A privately owned Queensland company, Steel-Line Garage Doors has strengthened its position as an industry leader by locally producing finger-proof sectional panels that reduce the frequency of garage door injuries.

"Studies on domestic injuries show that 80-90% of all garage door finger injuries occur while manually closing the door, so the provision of a safe and affordable, high quality garage door was a high priority for us when considering product and development", said Bob Kurzok, founder and managing director of Steel-Line Garage Doors.

"The new finger protection joint panels eliminate the risk of serious injuries by pushing fingers out of the sectional joints, as opposed to conventional garage doors that jam fingers in between the panels as the door closes.

"Steel-Line appreciates the industry support we have received and value the recognition that the Master Builders Association Award for the Best New Building Product has given us."

Steel-Line Garage Doors has been servicing Australia's residential, industry and commercial sectors with garage doors systems since 1979. The company specialises in sectional overheads, roller doors, tilt doors, roller grilles, and roller shutters, plus a large range of remote control operators.
